Critical chatter : women and human rights in South East Asia / Caroline Lambert ; Sharon Pickering ; Christine Alder. – Durham, N.C.: Carolina Academic Pr., c2003. X, 193 p., index, bibliogr. p. 175-183. – (Gender and justice series) – ISBN 0890891206

Contents: Ch. 1. Universality, Feminism and Human Rights - Ch. 2. Representing Critical Chatter - Ch. 3. Women's Social Activism in South East Asia - Ch. 4. Naming Activism, Naming Feminism - Ch. 5. Naming Human Rights - Ch. 6. Critical Chatter.

Note: "Critical Chatter is the politicised conversation by which women activists in South East Asia negotiate the possibilities and pitfalls of human rights in their activism for social change. Based on conversations with women activists in Malaysia, the Philippines, Hong Kong, Thailand and women from Burma living along the Thai Burma border, this book argues that critical chatter reflects the challenges of universality in human rights and feminism. But rather than outright reject, through critical chatter women activists produce a form of strategic universality. This enables the women activists to tap into a universal framework of human rights, while simultaneously acknowledging its failure to resonate among women in the community and its failure to recognise the experiences of women in the articulation of human rights standards. This book would be of interest to academics and activists interested in current challenges to social activism theory and practice, or in the potential application of a human rights framework to their work." - Book jacket.

Note: It is thought that Laos is home to 47 ethnic groups. The Lao, or Gelo, form half the country's population and predominant culture. Laos is also home to many mountain minorities who live with their own languages, beliefs and aesthetic traditions. A large number of these local cultures, some of them of great antiquity, have managed to survive in spite of the ups and downs of regional history. This cultural diversity is currently under threat - in particular the intangible heritage of the oral, gestural, musical and ritual kind that relies entirely on memory.

Note: the product of thirteen years of research, interviews, and experience, this is the most authoritative book ever written on the interrelationship of drugs, insurgency, counterinsurgency, and politics in Burma. Widely respected as one of the world's leading experts on Burma, Bertil Lintner has drawn on his extensive travels and personal meetings with rebel commanders, ethnic leaders, and other key figures to present a compelling and comprehensive picture of politics and society in a poor and bitterly divided country.

Fighting between the central government and myriad political and ethnic insurgencies entered its forty-seventh year in 1994, with no solution in sight. While other countries in the region are developing into freer, more open societies, once-democratic Burma has been ruled by a medieval military dictatorship since 1962.

The complex nexus between the drug problem, military rule, and Burma's civil war has rarely been considered when international narcotics agencies have evaluated the drug problem in the Golden Triangle. Consequently, millions of dollars have been wasted in a misguided effort to treat the problem as a localized vice, rather than addressing the underlying historical, social, and economic factors behind the drug explosion. Meanwhile, opium production is increasing steadily year by year.

This book aims to explore the inextricable links among Burma's booming drug production, insurgency, and counterinsurgency and to explain why the country has been unable to shake off over thirty years of military rule to build a modern democratic society. Burma's ethnic strife, the author argues, is not a peripheral problem confined to the country's border areas. Without a lasting solution to ethnic divisions and the civil war they have fueled, Burma will remain a source of political despair - and the opium it grows will continue to flood the markets of the world.

Note: Lintner describes with care and deep insight the struggle by the Kachin and Shan ethnic groups against Burmese army rule, and records the decline and fall of the CPB – the Communist Party of Burma. During their 2,275 kilometre trek, at times in great danger, they wrote the history of a 40-year forgotten war, a history which would otherwise never have been committed to paper in such rich detail. Their daughter Hseng Tai was born in Nagaland, India at the inception of the journey.
