2000 report on labor practices in Burma / prepared by U.S. Department of Labor, Bureau of International Labor Affairs. – [Washington, D.C.?: The Bureau, 2000]. 73, [30] l., bibliogr. l. [98-103]. – February 2000

Note: An update to the 1998 Report on labor practices in Burma, beginning with a summary providing background information on political and economic conditions in Burma and the original findings of the Labor Dept. with regard to the abuse of worker's rights in that country, specifically in the areas of forced labor, forced relocations, freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining, and child labor. The update then continues with three sections providing a description of developments that have occurred since the September 1998 release of the initial report and the Dept.'s conclusions regarding any changes that may have occurred in the following areas: forced labor (particularly forced labor on projects related to development of the tourism industry and the Yadana pipeline) and forced relocations in Burma; worker's rights in Burma (specifically freedom of association and the right to bargain collectively); and child labor in Burma. A fourth section deals with U.S. policy with respect to Burma. It summarizes the efforts of the U.S. Government to encourage the transition to a democratic government in Burma. This section also details U.S. Government efforts designed to document and hold accountable the regime in Burma for the abuse and denial of human rights and, in particular, worker's rights. Mode of access to the electronic version: World Wide Web. Also available in an electronic version via the World Wide Web.
