An allegorical work describing the hardships and difficulties that a seeker after true happiness has to undergo and the temptations and errors that he ought to avoid in order to secure beatitude. The author seems to have written this book after the manner of Bunian's Pilgrim's Progress, but the former is written in originality and not free from sectarianism. The attempt is, however, praiseworthy.

16th March 1892.	85	8vo.	I.	100	Printed.	Not given	...	Is a curious pamphlet containing a number of criminal cases against some of the Mahdians of the Umballa District and a number of articles from the 'Tribune' reviewing the proceedings. From the documents reproduced it would seem that some of the lower courts did not evince a calm and unbiased spirit in disposing of the cases.
6th May 1892.	28	8vo.	R.	500	Ditto.	0 8 0	...	Translation of a Sanskrit work on watching the passage of breath from the nostrils. It is said that by steadily following the rules and directions given in the book the student can acquire mastery over the elements (taiva) and become a perfect Yogi capable of preserving health, curing diseases, reading thought, forecasting weather, and performing wonders.

2nd April 1892.	70	16mo.	I.	1,000	Ditto.	0 8 0	Lala Ruchi Ram, M.A., Assistant Professor, Government College, Lahore.	This little book contains lessons on a number of mechanical powers the knowledge of which is necessary for the Punjab University Entrance Examination. The lessons are couched in easy terms readily intelligible to the young students, and the learned author has treated of the subject in a masterly way, giving full explanations and illustrating the matter with simple diagrams. The attempt is highly praiseworthy and deserving of encouragement. Contains valuable hints to assist teachers in schools in using apparatus for illustrating lessons on electricity.

The subject matter of the book is not to teach morality as the name of the publication (Teacher of Good Conduct) would imply, but on the other hand it parades immorality in very indecent terms, and is altogether quite unworthy of a perusal.

A tale of love and adventures in which one Mubárik met with numerous accidents attended with extreme bodily pain and mental anguish. The style is good, and the book is on the whole well worth a perusal.

A novel designed to ameliorate the condition of the Hindú Society which the author has attempted to delineate by relating stories showing how people are deceived by Sádhas, astrologers and others. The evils of extravagant expenses on marriages, the wearing of jewels, polygamy, and widowhood, have been clearly described, and the Hindús are asked to make strenuous efforts for acquiring useful knowledge and educate their females. The style is tolerably fair with an indeterminate mixture of Sanskrit and Hindí terms. The author intends to bring out three more volumes of the work.

A sentimental novel describing most effectively and vividly a very touching story of a young and beautiful widow. After a prolonged illness, brought on herself through sorrow and self-denial, when her end was approaching she summoned to her presence her kinsmen and neighbours and refused to them on the necessity of the remarriage of widow supporting her statements by her personal experiences of more than twenty years. The book is a valuable addition to the Hindí literature of the day.

A novel relating to the adventures of Prince Saif-ul-Mulk, who left his home to search for Princess Badl-ul-Jamál whose portrait impressed him with her beauty.

A series of three books by the well known Musavi Muḥammad Zakā-Ullāh of Delhi. They are very valuable addition to the Urdu literature. All the moral readers based chiefly on the writings of Smiles. In Tālim-ul-Khāisāf the learned Musavi has shown how character is formed and developed, being often influenced by circumstances, and how good habits and pleasing manners, which make their possessor and those among whom he may be living, so cheerful and happy, are or should be acquired. Tālim-ul-Ikhlāq is about man's noble nature and his obligations to himself, to society and to God. The third book, Tālim-ul-Intizām is a book on domestic economy and sanitary science, by attending to which a man, however poor, can hope to get on well through life. All these books might be read with great advantage by students and other young men.

Kānsḥī Rām, Teacher of Zimindārī School at Jassowal, District Ludhiana, resident of Dhāndara.
